TRIAL IN PARISMystery Retold in Court

PARIS, Sept. 27 (UPI) —

Testimony that Moroccan Interior Minister Gem Mohamed Oufkir personally held a dagger at the throat of exile leftist leader Mehdi Ben Barka in a suburban Paris villa was given in court here yesterday.

French journalist Jean Marvier, 40, told the court the story of Ben Barka's kidnaping as it was told him by the late Georges Figon, a small-time Paris underworld figure.

Figon was found shot dead in what was officially pronounced a suicide one month after Ben Barka was kidnaped in a Paris street last Oct. 20 with the help of French policemen. Ben Barka, presumably was murdered. The French state claims that Mr. Oufkir had engineered the plot to liquidate his leading political adversary.

Mr. Marvier said, quoting Figon, that upon his abduction Ben Barka was taken to a villa, south of Paris.

Mr. Marvier said that according to Mr. Figon, Ben Barka was locked in a first-floor room of the villa and delivered Oct. 30 to Ahmed Dlimi, Oufkir's right-hand man, and an assistant identified only as Achachi.

Mr. Marvier testified that Dlimi and Achachi said, upon arriving at the villa, "we will kill him (Ben Barka) right away, and bury him in the little woods nearby."
